ERP & CRM DEVELOPMENT

CRM is short for Customer Relationship Management and helps businesses manage their relationship with their customers and the data associated with them.

ERP is short for Enterprise Resource Planning. As the name suggests, ERP is responsible for back-end operations of a company, for example, accounting, finance, HR, inventory etc.

ERP SYSTEMS

ERP Systems primarily combine data and processes that take place in the backend - i.e. in departments that do not directly face the customer. These include manufacturing, warehousing, purchasing and accounting. The fundamental aim of ERP systems is to improve collaboration within the company and thereby reduce costs.

BENEFITS OF CHOOSING ERP SOLUTIONS

- Improved customer service
- Cost savings
- Collaboration
- Better data security
- Organized workflows

CRM – CUSTOMER RELATIONSHIPS

A Customer Relationship Management System (CRM system) records and manages all customer contacts and data in the company. The functions of a typical CRM system include, for example, lead management, creation of email campaigns, self-service support, automation of support and ticketing. A CRM system today must fulfill high requirements in terms of mobility. After all, sales employees are on the road relatively often.
